

A FREE GUIDE

The Yogic Breathing Guide

Breathe the way your body was made to — in three simple steps.

3 STEPS · 5 MINUTES A DAY

@yogashaktiwithashishanant

ashishanant.com

THE NATURAL BREATH

You were born knowing this — but somehow we lost it.

Years of stress, sitting and rushing taught most of us to breathe high and shallow — into the chest alone.

Yogic breathing simply restores the full, natural breath: low, slow and complete. It calms the nerves, brings in more oxygen, and steadies the mind.

Done well, the breath moves “like the swell of the sea.”

WHAT THE RESEARCH SUGGESTS

Slow, conscious yogic breathing is linked to a calmer nervous system and steadier attention — and, with regular practice, better heart-rate variability (a marker of a resilient nervous system). See the research on ashishanant.com.

ABOUT YOGA SHAKTI

A sincere offering rooted in the Guru–Shishya Parampara, led by Ashish Anant — a disciple of revered Tantra Masters Ma Shakti Devpriya AnandNath Ji & Acharya Agyaatadarshan AnandNath Ji.

The three-part breath

Learn each part on its own — belly, chest and shoulder. On the next page, you'll join them into one smooth wave.

1

STEP 1

The Belly Breath

One hand on the belly. Breathe in — the belly rises like a balloon filling; the chest stays almost still. Breathe out — it falls.

Impact: uses the diaphragm and lower lungs — the calmest, most efficient breath.

2

STEP 2

The Chest Breath

Now breathe into the chest — feel the ribcage widen outward like a bellows, then draw back in.

Impact: opens the middle lungs — the air we lose first under stress.

3

STEP 3

The Shoulder Breath

At the top of the in-breath, draw in a little more — collarbones and shoulders lift slightly. Out: they settle, then the chest, then the belly.

Impact: fills the very top of the lungs. A little effort here is completely normal.

PUT IT TOGETHER

Now, one flowing breath.

INHALE · belly fills › chest widens › shoulders lift

EXHALE · shoulders soften › chest draws in › belly empties toward the spine

Join the three into a single, smooth wave — no jerks, each part melting into the next, “like the swell of the sea.” Pause softly at the end of the exhale, then begin again.

How to practise?

- Start small. 5–10 rounds, slowly building to about 10 minutes a day — morning and evening.
- Stay quiet. Breathe so softly there is almost no sound. Keep the whole body relaxed.
- Never strain. If you feel light-headed, return to normal breathing and rest.
- Make it natural. Once it feels easy, drop the effortful top step and simply breathe belly + chest.

Exhale fully to inhale fully.

A gentle caution: practise softly. If you have a heart or lung condition, learn under guidance.

Prefer to practise with guidance? Yogic breathing is part of our complimentary live sessions — join us →

YOUR NEXT STEP

Nadi Shodhana – The Healing Breath

A FREE WORKSHOP

Nadi Shodhana is the key foundational practice, hailed in the Yogic and Tantric scriptures. Practised regularly, it brings:

Calmer mind

Less stress

Balanced energy

Good physical health

Prepares for meditation

Taught the authentic way — with the do's and don'ts that keep it safe.

Register

ashishanant.com/nadi-shodhana

MORE WAYS TO PRACTISE WITH US

👤 Free live Yoga Sessions — ashishanant.com/sessions

📖 Guides & resources — ashishanant.com/resources

Follow & community

Found this helpful? Share it — send a friend to ashishanant.com for their own copy.

॥ SHIVOHAM ॥